Educators resource pack: Supporting children after bushfires

Emerging Minds and ACATLGN

Returning to school may feel like a bigger milestone than usual this year in the midst of a difficult bushfire season.

It's important to remember that children are particularly vulnerable to the impacts of disasters or traumatic events. Even if they have not been directly exposed to the event, children may well still be impacted by scenes depicted in the related media coverage.

As an educator, you are uniquely placed to support them in their recovery post-bushfire by providing them with a return to stable, predictable routines and opportunities to express emotions and feel understood.

This curated selection of resources will assist you to support your students in their return to school. It contains evidence-based videos, fact sheets and tips about what you can expect and how you can help students impacted by trauma.

The resources have been selected from our Community Trauma Toolkit. To view the full Toolkit, click here.

In the classroom
- How educators can help in the classroom
- Australian bushfires: Student wellbeing and support for teachers (AIDR co-authored resource)
- Re-establishing routines and rules following a disaster or traumatic event (video)
- Trauma sensitive behaviour management

About students
- Psychological first aid tip card
- Psychological reactions to trauma by age and stage (videos):
  - Age 0–12 months
  - Age 2–4 years
  - Age 5–12 years
- Psychological reactions to trauma by age and stage (fact sheets):
  - Age 0–12 months
  - Age 2–4 years
  - Age 5–12 years

For parents
- 10 ways to support your child during the bushfire season

Looking after yourself

It is important for you as an educator to look after your own welfare, as well as the welfare of your students. Looking after yourself and managing your own stress levels leaves you better equipped to support students and establish a safe learning environment. If you are feeling stressed or overwhelmed you may find it harder to react in calm and constructive ways to students who are demonstrating difficult behaviours.

- Self-care plan (completed with examples)
- Self-care plan (blank)