The PERCS Conversation Guide is a psychosocial discussion tool for professionals working with parents. It supports collaborative, respectful conversations around the impact of parental and family adversities, such as mental and physical health issues, substance use issues, and family and domestic violence on children’s daily lives.

The guide provides example questions to help you explore five important domains in a child’s life. It is designed to help you to recognise parents’ strengths and hopes for their family, and opportunities to support and improve children’s mental and physical health, resilience and wellbeing.

There are four broad stages to the guide:

1. What is the entry point?
   - Look for opportunities, or ‘entry points’ to engage the parent in conversations about their child. Potential entry points include:
     - The parent presents with an issue or circumstances that might impact on the child.
     - The parent expresses concerns about the child’s behaviour or circumstances.
     - The professional explores the child’s mental health and wellbeing through:
       - open enquiry
       - concerns around parental, family, or social adversity.

2. What are you curious about?
   - Consider the five PERCS domains:
     - Parent-child relationships
     - Emotions and behaviours
     - Routines
     - Communication and meaning-making
     - Support networks
   - This guide contains example questions to assist professionals in their conversations with parents.

3. Conversation with the parent
   - Conduct a collaborative and respectful conversation with the parent to arrive at shared understandings and decisions, using the six principles of parent engagement:
     - Child-aware and parent-sensitive
     - Curiosity
     - Collaboration
     - Strengths and hopes
     - Context
     - Respect
   - These principles will support the development of the trusting therapeutic relationship.

4. Provide support
   - Provide support to parents to lessen the impacts of adversity on their children:
     - Use a strengths-based approach to support a positive parent–child relationship and improved social and emotional wellbeing for children.
     - Provide resources to parents regarding child development and parenting practices.
     - Practice integrated care and make warm referrals to other community supports or specialist services.
     - Continue to work with the parent around their initial presenting issue.
Parent-child relationship

Definition: A safe, secure, responsive and nurturing relationship between a child and their parent/caregiver is key to building resilience.

Example question: What’s it like being a parent to (child’s name?)

Professional’s role:
- Identify if/how parents feel/stay connected to their child in the face of challenges.
- Promote parents’ confidence and a positive parent-child relationship (warmth, acceptance, stability).

Emotions and behaviours

Definition: Children need to feel loved, safe and confident that their emotions will be listened to and responded to in a nurturing way.

Example question: Has your child or family lived through a traumatic event or period of time?

Professional’s role:
- Help parents to understand and be responsive to their child’s emotions and behaviours.
- Help to develop a shared language around emotions.

Routines

Definition: Routines and rituals provide children with a stable base, especially in times of stress.

Example question: Are you able to make time to read or play games with (child’s name)?

Professional’s role:
- Encourage parents to create routines and predictability in their children’s lives.

Communication and meaning-making

Definition: Through respectful and effective communication, children can express emotions, make meaning from experiences of adversity, and develop their resilience.

Example question: Is (child’s name) able to share their thoughts and feelings with you?

Professional’s role:
- Support parents in understanding the impact of adult issues on their child.
- Guide parents in helping their children make sense of life events through questions and conversation.

Support networks

Definition: Safe and supportive networks outside the family can be key to a child’s social and emotional wellbeing.

Example question: Who do you think would notice if (child’s name) was struggling?

Professional’s role:
- Help parents to identify and develop a consistent, positive support network for their child outside of their immediate family.
The PERCS Conversation Guide offers ways to initiate respectful and collaborative conversations with parents. The way you engage with parents is a key part of these conversations.

The six practice positions for effective engagement are informed by evidence and practitioner experience, and may already be a part of your work. They will assist you to focus on engaging parents in non-judgmental, non-stigmatising conversations about their parenting role, and their child’s social and emotional wellbeing.

Child-aware and parent-sensitive

A child-aware approach acknowledges and considers the experiences and needs of the client’s children, ensuring they are not ‘invisible’ to services. It considers the wellbeing of those children and their role in the client’s life, even when children don’t directly access the service themselves.1

A child-inclusive approach involves children in conversations about their social and emotional wellbeing where it is appropriate to do so.

A parent-sensitive approach identifies, acknowledges and validates clients and draws upon the parenting role as a key source of meaning and motivation in their life. This includes being aware of stigma and the additional fear of judgment about their parenting ability, which can complicate the development of a trusting therapeutic relationship.2,3,4

Curiosity

A curious stance involves looking holistically at what is happening for your client, rather than simply focusing on their diagnosis or symptoms. It involves gently exploring the parent’s mental health and how it may be impacting on other areas of their life, such as their relationships, family functioning and routines.5,6

Being curious is about putting yourself in the shoes of the parent and their children. It asks you to be mindful of, and sensitive to, issues such as:

- trauma history, family and domestic violence, financial insecurity and housing instability, and how they impact on clients as parents
- the parent’s potential fear of being judged
- being open about the limits of confidentiality, whilst also being sensitive to the parent’s fear that you may report them to child protection authorities
- the parent’s own self-judgment, internal critic and sense of shame
- the parent’s own experiences of being parented; and
- intergenerational cycles of trauma and disadvantage.

Respect

Respect involves considering each parent’s unique story, values, culture, perspectives, needs and plans, and recognising their role as an expert in their own lives.

It also involves empathic, non-judgemental, respectful use of professional expertise that:

- is warm, genuine and transparent, in order to build trust and a place of safety
- includes open and honest conversations around consent and mandated reporting
- seeks to empower parents through knowledge of the above
- acknowledges and validates the client’s parenting role, regardless of what shape it takes
- respects parents’ knowledge and understanding of their own children and family
- is very mindful to avoid judging parents who are facing challenges; and
- views parents as more than just the challenges they face.2,7,9
Contextual understandings

Understanding the parenting and family context is key to working collaboratively with parents. This involves asking open questions about the client’s life, including their:

- family of origin
- current relationships and family/kinship/friendship supports
- child raising circumstances (e.g. any access, custody, shared care or kinship care arrangements)
- commitments (e.g. employment, volunteering, study, caring)
- culture and spiritual beliefs; and
- attitudes to parenting and childhood.

Contextual understandings are key to providing culturally competent service delivery.10,11

Collaboration

Collaboration involves supporting parents to feel confident and competent, providing them with choices, and encouraging them. It involves the sharing of knowledge – the client’s knowledge of their own life, and the professional’s knowledge of their field.

You can work collaboratively with parents by:

- helping them to recognise their own strengths, resources and ways in which their parenting is going well
- empowering them to make their own decisions
- encouraging them to have self-compassion
- acknowledging and calling on their parental expertise – their knowledge and understanding of their own children
- taking time to understand the child’s needs and hopes for their family; and
- working on a plan for support that is based on the parent’s and child’s identified needs, hopes and concerns about their family.

A trusting, collaborative therapeutic relationship allows for meaningful participation and shared decision-making.4,5,8,12

Strengths and hopes

This involves identifying, highlighting, reinforcing and building upon the hopes, strengths, efforts and positive qualities of parents, and the resources available to them.

It is important to demonstrate the belief that your client, as a parent, wants the best for their children. You can do this by:

- asking questions about the values which underlie parents’ hopes for their children
- exploring what is important to parents in their relationship with their children
- empowering parents to see how things are improving, in order to build and strengthen their self-efficacy; and
- recognising that culture is a source of rich tradition, resilience and strength for many parents and children, especially Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.3,8,9,12,13
References

These questions have been designed as a guide to practice. They should be used with sensitivity, in conjunction with the six principles outlined in the guide summary.

This guide is not intended to be prescriptive. The order and emphasis given to each of the five domains should be tailored to suit your work context and the family's culture and circumstances.

You do not need to ask questions from every domain, every time. Instead, work on those areas that are relevant each session.

Trust may take a few sessions to develop, so questions can be revisited if necessary.

The language used in a guide only and should be adapted to suit the individual worker/client.

The parent's unique situation and level of stability should always be kept in mind when using this guide. It is crucial to think about what the parent is feeling at the end of these conversations, and to ensure they leave your sessions with a sense of hope.

For more resources, visit emergingminds.com.au/online-training
Engagement questions

What opportunities do you get to spend time talking with (child's name)?

What are the best times for you and (child's name) to talk about things? Are there particular activities that help you to talk?

Do you talk with (child's name) as you're doing things with them, and about what's happening around them? (Even if they're non-verbal)

What are some things (child's name) does to help you understand what they need?

What do you do to understand how (child's name) is making sense of their world, and how you can support them to feel safe?

Exploring the impact of adversity on children

Do you talk with (child's name) about any challenges your family may be facing?

Is (child's name) able to share their thoughts and feelings with you when things are tough? What might get in the way of this sharing?

What changes might (child's name) have noticed as a result of your adversity? (Prompt: What might they see in your face or behaviours, or hear in the tone of your voice?)

What might worry (child's name) the most about your experience of adversity? What sense might they make of the changes that they notice?

Exploring the impact of adversity on children

How do routines at home change when you are facing tough times? What do you think (child's name) notices about these changes?

How do routines outside of the home change when you are facing tough times?

What happens for (child's name) when you're not with them? Do other people know about their daily routines?

How are the regular family routines/activities affected when you're facing tough times? Are there ways that some of these routines could continue, even when times are tough? Who can help with this?

Exploring the impact of adversity on children

How do routines at home change when you are facing tough times? What do you think (child's name) notices about these changes?

How do routines outside of the home change when you are facing tough times?

What happens for (child's name) when you're not with them? Do other people know about their daily routines?

How are the regular family routines/activities affected when you're facing tough times? Are there ways that some of these routines could continue, even when times are tough? Who can help with this?